ചായാ • ചായ • Chaya

The story revolves around a superstition in Kerala that if a woman drinks black tea during pregnancy, the child born would have a dark complexion. Discrimination based on colour is still prevalent in every part of India and this video is the epitome of different misconceptions that feed onto one's insecurity that ultimately leads them to self-isolation from society. This short film conveys a powerful message about the importance of being true to ourselves, believing in our own worth, and treating others with kindness. It reminds us not to let old beliefs or the opinions of others define our happiness. Instead, the film encourages us to embrace our uniqueness and accept others for who they are.

Ultimately, its not the colour of the Chaya that matters but how you feel after drinking it.
